Short story

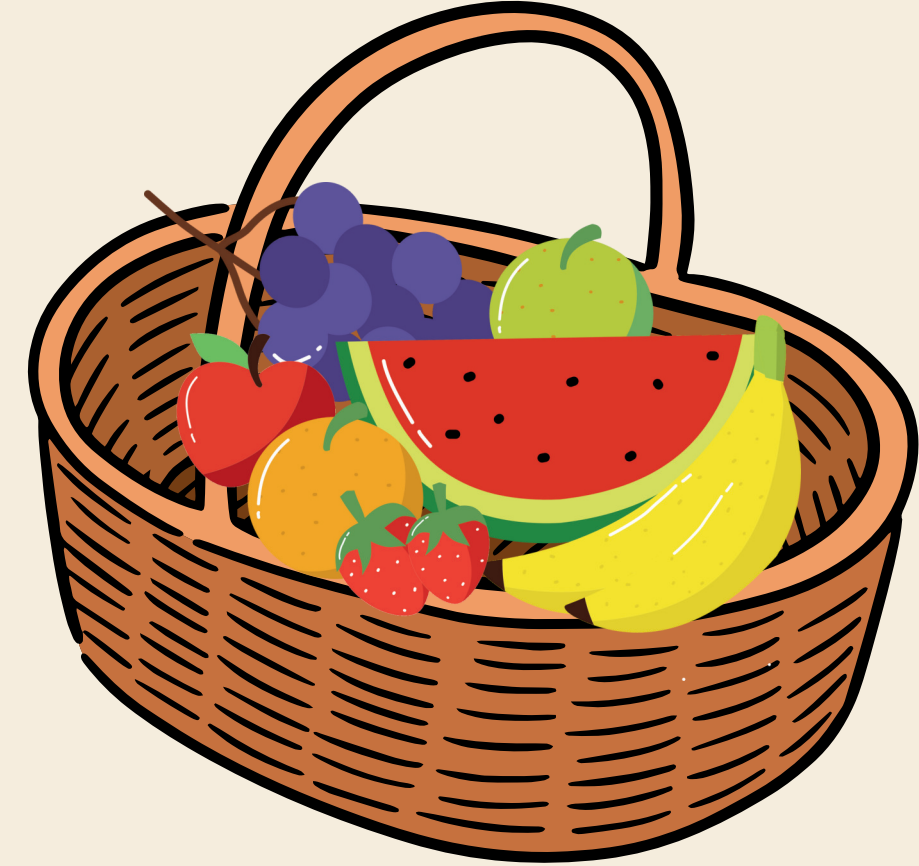

THE KING AND HIS THREE PRINCESSES

Once, there was a kind king who loved his three daughters very much. One morning, he called them to the garden and gave each princess a basket.

“Go into the village,” he said, “and use your basket well.”

The first princess filled hers with flowers for herself.

The second filled hers with sweet fruits to eat.

The third gave away her basket to help a hungry child.

When they returned, the king
asked, "Who is the richest?"

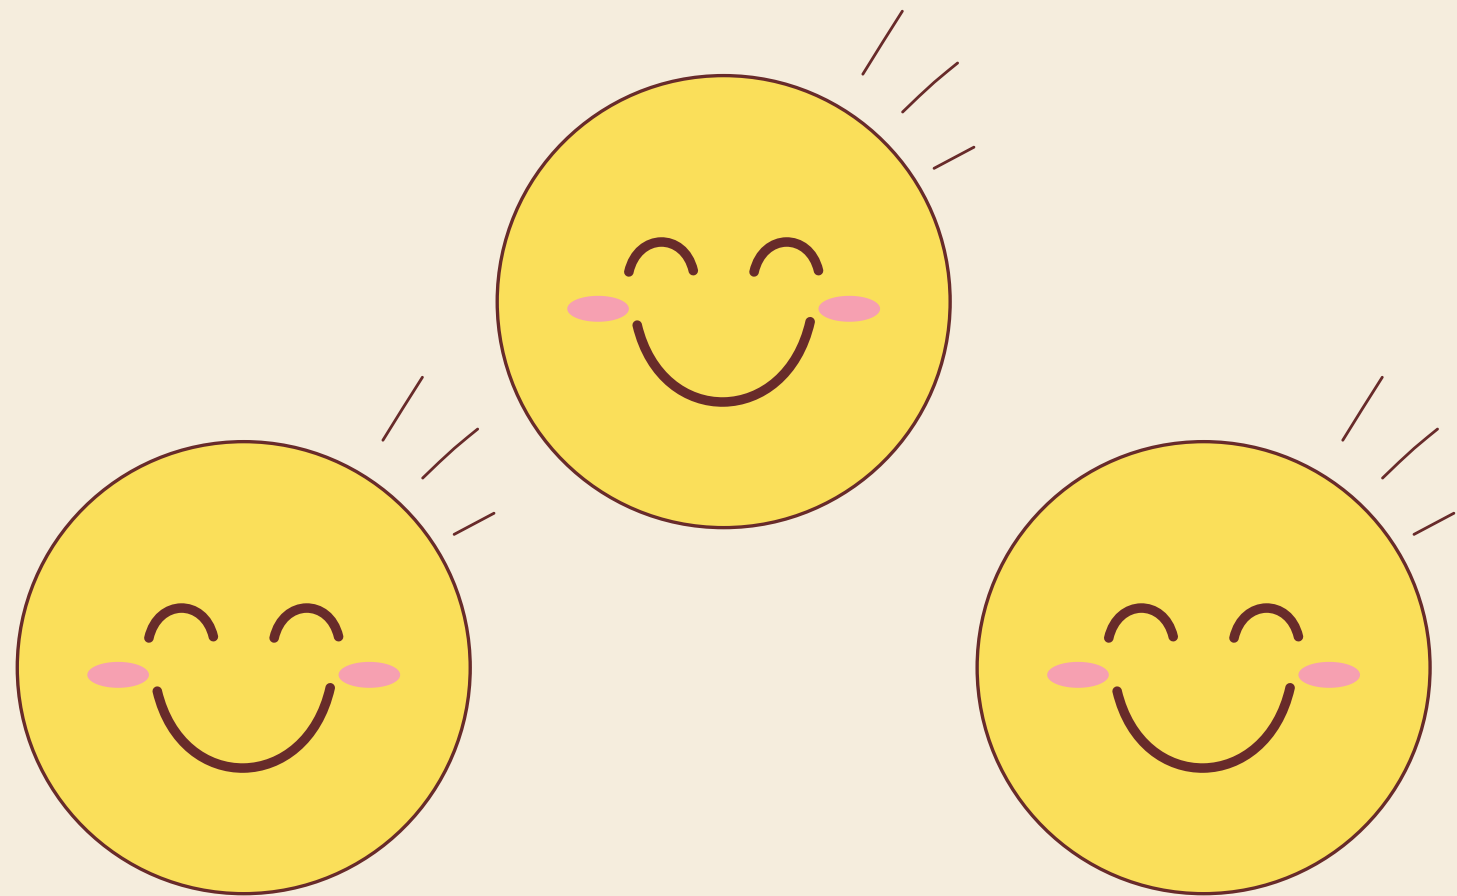

The first princess had only wilted
flowers.

The second had only empty fruit
skins.

But the third had the love and thanks of the villagers, who came singing with gifts and smiles.

The king smiled and said, "Helping others brings back more than we give. That is the greatest treasure."

And from that day, the three princesses never forgot their father's lesson.
